Instructor

Tami A. Goldstein

WLMT, CST-D, BCTMB

This introductory workshop details the physiology and anatomy of the cranio-sacral system....its function in health and its relationship to disease process. Participants will learn hands-on, fascial-release techniques to evaluate and affect pain, and dysfunction. It includes lecture, demonstration and practice for each technique presented. This workshop also offers a special focus on autism spectrum disorders and suggestions for working successfully with this under served population.

Massage Therapists are in a position to provide hands on work to individuals on the autism spectrum. The current autism prevalence is 1 in 45 children. To effectively work with those affected by autism, you need to understand the unique and varied presentations. This course will provide; education about autism and tools for effective therapy: education on how different touch modalities address sensory systems in the body, how understandings an individual's particular presentation of their disability can lead to successful and beneficial therapy sessions,. The course will also cover neuroanatomy and the differences between a neurotypical developed brain and the brain of a child with autism. The course instructor will use her extensive background working with this population both personally and professionally and will combine storytelling with role playing and group activities to aid instruction.

Workshop Fee: $275 if paid by October 14, 2020
$30 study guide fee paid to the instructor on day one
